A mother took her 10-month-old son to the GP as she was worried about his eye, as it appeared unusual in one of the photographs taken at a family gathering. She noticed that his right eye showed a pearly white pupillary reflex.

The GP explained to the mother that the child needed urgent referral to an ophthalmic surgeon. The ophthalmic surgeon confirmed the suspicion of the GP and planned the immediate management of this condition. A CT scan of the orbit was requested.
